Certainly, the Apple Store has removed images of the iPhone XS from its “new and improving” section. Nevertheless, many iPhone XS users are complaining about the excessive time needed to switch between augmented reality (AR) filtering options in their photos. While switching from a Wide Angle lens, to a telephoto lens, and then back, is not an arduous task for the majority of users, many iPhone XS users are finding themselves stuck for long amounts of time, only to find themselves filtering an image as taken from the widest angle, or telephoto lens available. Once they are in one mode, many iPhone XS users are found to be unable to change their current lens without a reload of the app.
