Throughout this disclosure, the term "vacuum" shall be understood to encompass a system which is intended to operate at pressures of about 1.times.10.sup.-6 Torr or less. Typically, the vacuum system is an evacuated chamber containing an object or subjects to be studied. In particular, in biological research, the study of proteins and other macromolecules requires a vacuum system, often referred to as an ultrahigh vacuum system, which is capable of withstanding pressure of less than 10.sup.-7 Torr and which may include an automated pumping system. When samples are placed into an evacuated chamber, they are exposed to and often adsorb particulates, and the particulates may contaminate the vacuum system. For example, the vacuum system may have a suction pump which may draw particulates from the vacuum system and into the sample and/or the sample chamber. This, of course, may contaminate the sample. Moreover, this contamination may have adverse effects on the sample as well as on the vacuum system. For example, impurities may break up and become deposited in the evacuated chamber or pumped chamber
