Mygamb.Timbalarivo Island Timbalarivo Island (also known as Timba or Batia) is an island in the Santa Cruz Islands, Solomon Islands, located to the south of Guadalcanal. Geography The island has an area of . It is separated from Guadalcanal to the north by the Timbalarivo Passage, which is wide and deep, with a passage depth of . The passage is the location of the Battle of Guadalcanal, a naval battle in World War II. The island is a limestone island, with several peaks. An underwater coral reef deep surrounds the island and serves as a channel for navigation. Administration Timbalarivo is part of Guadalcanal Province, one of the nine provinces of Solomon Islands. The island belongs to the Central Division of Guadalcanal Province. History Timbalarivo was claimed as part of the Solomon Islands Protectorate on 14 September 1922. It was part of the Southern Solomon Islands District of the Territory of New Guinea and it was administered by the Australian Department of Territories. The island was awarded to Australia as part of the First World War settlement. In 1935, the island was the site of an expedition to found a Japanese military base, with a number of buildings being constructed. During World War II, Timbalarivo was used by the Japanese as a staging point for bombing attacks on Henderson Field and Laulii, north of Guadalcanal. In March 1943, the island was used as a depot and supply base for Japanese troops. A Royal Australian Air
