A properly placed and applied sealant prevents tooth decay where it occurs and can help protect tooth enamel, as well as the tight spaces beneath the teeth. A sealant is a polymeric substance that is placed within tooth grooves and between and along the biting surfaces to protect tooth enamel and help minimize cavity formation. A sealant not only prevents tooth decay, but it is a simple and painless procedure that many children and adolescents find acceptable. FACT: The teeth of the 20- to 40-year-old age group still have the highest percentage of enamel remaining. The frequency of sealant use is increasing dramatically. The American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry recommends the use of sealants on children of all ages, including infants and infants under 1 year old. In addition, pediatricians and pediatric dentists may prescribe sealants for younger children who have not had sealants placed in the past. Your First Sealant After your child's first dental visit and at each visit thereafter, the pediatrician or dentist should review a preventive care plan with the parents. It is important to discuss toothbrushing, the use of fluoride, and the need for sealants. After the first tooth eruption, your child's dentist can place a pediatric sealant on the tooth. This can be done at the same time that fluoride treatment is provided. If you are not aware of the sealant treatment, it may be conducted within 1 to 2 weeks after the first enamel appears on the teeth. Another option for sealants in young children is to apply a preventive resin. These procedures are quick, easy to perform, and provide excellent protection for the enamel. Sealants do not take as long to apply, as some of the resin sealants. The time involved for placing a pediatric sealant is approximately 5 to 10 minutes per tooth.Q: How to build war using
