Microsoft OSWorld member, he is really good: > Can you give me download link for the SP1a? if i do that, will it get me SP1? > how do i check if my already installed SP is SP1a? If you have already SP1 installed, Windows will say that its SP2, because SP2 is a real SP. In that case SP1a will come as 'update' package. A good SP is there, but it's not as good as SP3. If you are a developer, you need to upgrade to Windows 2003 and then SP3. And most of the time you need to wait 4 months. Other thing to check is the 'patch'. Sp2 is a real SP, only if you upgraded your OS to SP2 and you still have SP1 installed on top of it, you will not be able to update the original SP. If you can still find SP1 installed, you can upgrade it to SP1a. In this post (and also the OP thread in forum) I have seen this and no one have answered it. Quote:

The data is saved in a PNG or TIFF image file or to a database. The data can also be displayed as a standard image. Bar Code is an image format used to encode textual information. It's easy to draw on paper, it can be read quickly and on a computer screen with the appropriate software, you can also decode it. Bar codes are printed, labels,

In Service Pack 2, Microsoft introduced a new type of service packs, which are the release of fixes and updates to the operating system. The next Service Pack, Service Pack 1a (SP1a), is a patch for the operating system (without further changes to the operating system) and was released in January 2007. The SP1a does not replace the Service Pack 2, instead it is an update for the version of the Windows XP operating system that already supports Service Pack 2. Since Service Pack 2 is already available, Service Pack 1a is considered an update.
