Field of the Invention This invention relates to a polyester film substrate, and more particularly, to a polyester film substrate which is excellent in heat resistance, mechanical properties, slidability, resistance to heat build-up, etc., and is free of image voids, and which can be suitably used in the field of, for example, packaging materials such as shrink films, medical materials such as blood bags and blood transfusion bags, and magnetic recording materials such as magnetic tapes. 2. Description of the Related Art A polyester film, particularly a biaxially oriented polyethylene terephthalate film, is excellent in physical properties such as mechanical properties, heat resistance, transparency, gloss, flatness, chemical resistance and slidability property, and is used in various industrial fields. Accordingly, there have been many developments on the use of the film as the substrate for various kinds of packaging materials. For example, JP-B-49-32223 and JP-B-49-32224 disclose a wrapping film using a biaxially oriented polyethylene terephthalate film. However, the biaxially oriented polyethylene terephthalate film which has heretofore been widely used as the substrate of a packaging material, is poor in the slidability between the substrate and the contents to be wrapped therein. Furthermore, a biaxially oriented polyethylene terephthalate film is known to be insufficient in the resistance to heat build-up. Thus, a biaxially oriented polyethylene terephthalate film having good slidability and heat resistance has not been developed yet. _map; std::map m_time; std::set m_size; }; class MasterExecutor : public ExecutorBase { public: MasterExecutor(const std::shared_ptr& executorFactory, const std::string& name, const std::shared_ptr& catalog, const std::shared_ptr&
