Appendix: The Lost Slot Machine (2005) A year later, the show was renamed The Lost Slot Machine. The identity crisis continued for nearly a year, as it struggled to find its voice. Early episodes mostly featured the week's title (e.g., "The Lost Slot Machine: Sandisk") while later episodes mostly featured the headlining act (e.g., "The Lost Slot Machine: Mephistopheles"). Other shows, such as Football Night in America and Sunday Night Baseball, also appeared. Analyst and web developer John Geirland said that "The Lost Slot Machine's best showings have been when baseball is the secondary focus; when entertainment is the primary focus; when The O.C. comes back from a break; and when it is the primary focus. But it was at its best when it was its own thing, and it no longer is." Sportscaster Bob Lobel said that the show's biggest challenge was to fit in in such a crowded timeslot. Television critic Alan Sepinwall noted that The Lost Slot Machine was similar to the 1970s sitcoms Ponderosa and That's My Mama. The show's last episode aired on April 2, 2006, and it was replaced on the schedule with reruns of reruns.
